ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A system for preparing and transmitting all desired images from one or more image-producing clients to a server for archiving or later analysis, validation, or reporting purposes. Images are queued on the client while they await transmission to the server and can also be reduced in size, if necessary, to reduce storage space or network transmission time. Once the images reside on the server, they can be added to an image database or used for further processing.